Interpersonal Effectiveness: Myths

Introduction

Everybody has some worries about standing up for themselves, expressing opinions, and saying “no.” Some of these worries are based on myths about interpersonal behavior.

There are two ways to counteract these myths:
1. Try to argue against them logically
2. Experiment out in the world, see if they are true

These techniques are called "cognitive restructuring" and can be really useful in helping people to do things that they really want to do but are afraid to do.

Challenging Myths about Interpersonal Effectiveness

Homework

Quickly look at each interpersonal effectiveness myth. Circle the myths you believe, and write a challenge to the myths that you circled. We have provided one example for you at the beginning of the exercise.

1. I can’t stand it if someone gets upset with me.
   Challenge Statement:
   It may be uncomfortable, but I don’t need their approval. I can stand it. I can tolerate the disapproval. Life goes on.

2. If they say “no,” it will kill me.
   Challenge Statement

3. I don’t deserve to get what I want or need.
   Challenge Statement
4. If I make a request, this will show that I am a weak person.

Challenge Statement

5. I must be really inadequate if I can't fix this myself.

Challenge Statement

6. I have to know whether a person is going to say "yes" before I make a request.

Challenge Statement

7. Making a request is a really pushy (bad, self-centered, selfish, unchristian) thing to do.

Challenge Statement

8. It doesn't make any difference; I don't care really.

Challenge Statement
9. Obviously, the problem is just in my head. If I would just think differently, I wouldn’t have to bother everybody else.

Challenge Statement

10. This is catastrophe (is really bad, is terrible, is driving me crazy, will destroy me, is a disaster).

Challenge Statement

11. Saying “no” to a request is always a selfish thing to do.

Challenge Statement

12. I should be willing to sacrifice my own needs for others.

Challenge Statement

13. Write your own statements, and come up with a challenge statement for each statement.

Adapted from www.dbtselphelp.com